Under it was found two quart bottles of whisky. In the other beds two more quarts were found.

The Guinn woman appeared horrified when she saw the deputy sheriff carrying the four quarts of whisky down the stairs. She disclaimed all ownership and suggested that it probably had been brought there by Terry Norton and Jim Mitchell, two men who room at the house.

Two Alleged "Bling Tigers." Sheriff Coffin raided two alleged "blind tigers." One was that kept by May Guinn, Forty-sixth street and Sangster avenue. Bottled beer and whisky were found and confiscated. Another place was a construction camp northwest of the city, where two foreigners were arrested. The criminal court investigator raided the Plaza hotel roof garden. Much liquor was confiscated there. Arrests were not made, but the grand jury will be asked to return indictments. The police walked by the notorious Plaza roof garden and raided an alleged gambling game in the Elite cafe, in Indiana avenue, the scene of recent police operations as a part of a political war between Samuel V. Perrott, chief of police, and the Glenn brothers, Democratic politicians of the west end. Consternation took the place of gayety, mong the revelers at the Plaza roof garden last night when Worley and a squad of constables obtained evidence of alleged liquor law violations

The evidence, which Worley says will be submitted to the grand jury, consisted of a large quantity of beer, wines and whisky behind a service bar in the south end of the roof garden, and an admission from a number of the waiters that drinks were being served.

The Plaza roof garden has been operated by Mickey Dugan, a Democratic machine politician. Dugan, it is said, owns the lease. The police have apparently been friendly toward the place during Dugan's regime as owner, and some policemen are said to have spent a large part of their time there when not on duty.

After bond had been provided for the alleged offenders they were told to appear at 9 o'clock today in the court of Louis Kiefer, a justice of the peace, for a preliminary hearing. When they appeared the cases were continued until September 12. The Guinn woman was released on bond provided by David Davis, a saloon keeper at 561 East Washington street. The men were released on cash bonds given by Illian Shoshvich, a foreigner, who has a saloon at 43 South West street.

Until Few Wacks Ago. Until a few weeks ago the Plaza roof garden was permitted to operate, without molestation by the police, until the early hours of the morning. At one time early one morning, a beer bottle or two and a few dishes were thrown from a window of the roof garden to the side walk and almost struck a pedestrian. The police emergency squad went to the place and reported later that an investigation was made. However, no arrests followed. Recently the management of the roof garden began closing the place at midnight and each night about the closing hour a police sergeant visited the building and remained there until all of the revelers had left. were summoned to appear before the grand jury it was hinted at the time that the summoning had something to do with gambling, reports of which are said to have been brought to the attention of the grand jurors. The nightly presence of the police sergeant at the Plaza caused some persons to remark that it also may have had something to do with alleged liquor violations.

When the constables arrived at the place about 10 o'clock last night about 100 men and women, most of them drinking, were seated at the tables. Ten waiters were busy going to and from the service barroom. Charles (Stormy) Hill, who is said to be the manger of the place, was the master of ceremonies. The sudden appearance of the constables almost caused a stampede. Men and women rushed toward the doorway in an attempt to escape. Some of the women, Worley said, told him they were married and were there without the consent of their husbands. They begged to be permitted to go. Some of the men did likewise. Quiet was restored when Worley announced that no arrests would be made.

Dugan Was Not There.

A raid by the police on the Elite Saturday night resulted in the arrest of nine colored men. The police visited several other places in quest of gamblers, but falled to find indications of any games an editerial on "Economy." His supposed plans did not materialize. He may own the place, but it is being operated now by his brother Pat, who, during the so-called war between Perrott and the Glenns, was asked to give up one of the nice political plums which he held as a member of the Bell crowd.

Sheriff Coffin had received complaints recently that liquor was being sold at a construction camp near the new Indianapolis-Frankfort railroad line, at a point about a mile southwest of the Indianapolis Country Club, and he began an investigation. He sent two of his agents to the camp Saturday, and they reported that they had bought beer and whisky at the place.

COONS SAYS HE CONTROLS THE FAIR CONCESSIONS

HENDREN, OF ACCOUNTS BOARD, AN EMPLOYE, HE ASSERTS.

STATE PAY STOPS, THEY SAY

Since the publication of conditions at the state fair ground that showed that Sanford F. Coons and Bert Hendren, field examiners of the state board of accounts, were prominent in the concession holdings for the state fair, it has developed that Coons is the chief concession holder and that he has practically had charge of all the concessions on the ground for several years. Coons says Hendren is merely an employe of Coons and Hendren contends that he is a partner with Coons in the enterprises, which are handled through Coons's name with the state board of In addition to handling the various concessions at the state fair, under the direction of those members of the state board of agriculture, who are chairmen—at various times—of the concession committee, Coons has had the privilege of using the state fair ground at other

Has Had Control of Races

It has developed that Coons has had ontrol of the fairground on such ocsons had to "see Hendren" when they desired to hold motorcycle races at the fair ground, Coons said that he bought the rights at the fair ground to control celebrations there July 4, 1915, and paid $200 for the privilege. Afterward he $200 for the privilege. Afterward he staged motorcycle races, fireworks and similar entertainments and Hendren collected the money from persons, who subleased various privileges. Coons said he paid Charles Downing, secretary to the state board of agriculture, $200 for the use of the fair ground on July 4. Hendren was paid a salary for his work, Coons said.

Explanations Given. Coons, who is taking a vacation from he state board of accounts while he is mployed at the state fair ground, wishes it known that he draws no pay from the state board of accounts when he is connected with the state fair conne is connected with the state fair concessions. Bert Hendren is in the same position, drawing no pay from the state board of accounts when he works at the state fair ground, he says.

Coons says Bert Hendren, son of Gilbert H. Hendren, head of the state board of accounts, is not connected officially with the state board of agriculture, but he says the state board of agriculture, but he say the state board of agriculture, but he says he has, heretofore, and will this year, employ Hendren to handle the money from the concessions at the state fair that Coons has bought and that Hendren will look after a part of the work that Coons has been employed to perform for the state fair officials.

Coons says he will have control of the concessions at the state fair this year, as he has for many years, his employment in concessions at the state fair this year, as he has for many years, his employment in that capacity coming from John Isenbarger, of North Manchester, head of the concessions committee of the state board of agriculture. During each year of his incumbency of the state fair position, Coons said, the receipts from the sale of concessions at the state foir head of the concessions at the state foir head of the concessions at the state fair head of the sale of concessions at the state fair head of the sale of the state foir head of the sale of the sal concessions at the state fair have grown Not as Accounts Board Employe. Coons wished to point out that he is acting merely as an individual in his work for the state fair and not, in any sense, in the capacity of an employe of the state board of accounts. Coons dwelt at tength, in his statement, on the fact that he has been employed by the state board of agriculture long before he be-came a field examiner of the state board accounts.

Both Coons and Hendren assert that the report from the state board of accounts, which recently lauded the state board of agriculture and its secretary, Charles Downing, for good business management, had nothing to do with the employment of either of the men by the state board of agriculture.

The meeting, which was for men, was held in the First Baptist men, was held in the First Baptist church.

"I do not want you to have the impression, however, that I intend to deal with your local situation, about which I know little, although I have read something about it," he continued. "I have enough to do to assist in cleaning up my own city, about whose affairs I know something, without talking about the affairs of Muncle, about which I know little or nothing. My talk is not designed primarily for Muncle, but the principles expressed are broad and general, and if they have application to your own situation I hope you may use them."

J. Frank Hanly's Picture Goes Suddenly as It Came

It became known today, following a visit of Ed Donnell, clerk of the state poard of printing and binding, to the office of Governor Ralston, that the big, framed photograph of J. Frank Hanly, Prohibition candidate for President, has mysteriously disappeared from above the doorway of the state printing board's office. The picture, framed in yellow pine and secretly hung above Donnell's door while Donnell was away on his vacation. while Donnell was away on his vacation, attracted wide attention at the state-house and caused much talk among Democrats who hold sway at the capitol.

When Donnell returned from his vacation he disclaimed knowledge of the picture. He was summoned to the office of Governor Ralston and an explanation was asked.

Donnell preferred to use the words of his seatmate at the statehouse, Ben Strickland, while he sought to explain his innocence in connection with the picture innocence in connection with the picture or to prove an alibi. He was pressed for something definite, but all he could say was that "the whole thing's decollete to me, Governor."
